the ultimate stage of intoxication will not be shunted to one side lightly. It is the burning question along the white streak. Milton Bronner, a former Louisville newspaperman, may have solved the problem.

Down in a village in the moonshine district near the feudal section of Breathitt county a man lay face up with the boiling sun beating down upon him. By him was an empty bottle.

Louis Ianzilo, a boy nine years old, was found unconscious in the gutter on a prominent street in the Bronx the other day. The boy said he had gone out with some other boys and that they had purchased boys and that they had purchased red wine and drank too much.
